

FIRST FIX.

Quote follow-up: win the jobs you already quoted

You did the hard part. You ran the call, wrote the quote, sent it over. Then it sits. When nobody follows up, the homeowner picks whoever called back. This fix puts every open quote on a follow-up clock.

THE FIX

1. Text every open quote at 24 hours. One line: "Hi {name}, checking in on the quote I sent yesterday - any questions I can answer?" The text reminds them you exist.
2. Call every open quote at 72 hours. The ones who did not reply to the text get one phone call. Ask what is holding up the decision. Sometimes it is a question they were embarrassed to ask.
3. Automate it if you already own the tool. Jobber and Housecall Pro both include quote follow-up reminders. If you run one of them, switch the automation on and the 24-hour text sends itself.
4. Close the loop every Friday. Fifteen minutes: every quote older than two weeks gets marked won, lost, or dead. A clean list is the only way the follow-up clock keeps working.

The quote is the warmest lead you will ever have. They asked you for a price. In a 2026 study, 72% of home-service companies never followed up after the first conversation (Pied Piper). Nobody else in town gets to follow up - only you. What's your typical job worth? What's that costing you?

Want a deeper dive? Schedule a no-cost 15-minute call and I will walk you through your biggest leak.

Book the 15-minute call

Steven - SLC Unlimited - slcunlimited.app - 602.692.5808